past. Yesterday the whole river was covered with ice, the middle of the stream, however, being hidden by what the police judged to be dangerous ice. Consequently the authorities forbade people to attempt to cross the fiver, and the police were instructed to enforce the order. In spite of this a number of venturesome men and boys utterly disregarding the warning cry of police and of crowds of people who were watching them, undertook to cross the Seine on the ice. As they neared the middle of the stream dull, cracking reports were heard, causing a number of the fool-hardy people to rush back to the sides of the river where the ice was much thicker. Others, to show how daring they were, jumped on. Immediately, with a long series of rumbling cracks, the ice gave way and precipitated the crowd of people into the freezing water. Cries of horror and alarm arose on the banks and police and life-savers rushed to the scene of disaster and did their utmost to save life. In spite of their efforts, and though a number of people were drawn from theirver, nine persons are known to have been drowned.

LONDON, January 14.—Referring to the motion in the United States Supreme Court Monday regarding the condemnation of the Canadian scaler Sayward, libelled in Alaska, the Times says it is surprised that any Americans are found to object to the jurisdiction of the tribunal which since the days of Chief-Justice Marshall they have held up to the admiration of the world. There had been some thought of amputation, but it was decided that an operation would be impracticable.

The boy continued to grow steadily worse and after having been in a semi-conscious condition for some time died yesterday. Sympathetic neighbors rendered every attention in their power and the last hours of the little sufferer were made as comfortable as possible. The devotion with which his older brother watched over and nursed him attracted the attention of all who visited the house.

A sad coincidence connected with the case is that several years ago an older brother suffered a fracture of the forearm, from which death by lockjaw resulted in exactly twelve days, one less than in the present instance.

Misc profits communities in an educational sense by elevating and refining, and it profits communities in a material sense as a factor in trade. The piano and organ business of Richmond has since the close of the war assumed vast proportions, and now the city is the piano and organ depot of supply for an enormous area of territory. Among the Richmond houses in this line of business which stands in the front rank and than which none is more widely known is that of Hume, Minor & Co.

The Philbary of the Conshaw, Dickerson, Hargrove, and Mitchell—5. and a Material Sense.

The firm has houses in three cities—Norfolk, Portsmouth, and Richmond—and is one of the oldest in the piano and organ frade in Virginia. Its members are John H. Hume, of Portsmouth: George A. Minor, of Richmond, and E. N. Wilcox, of Norfolk. The commodious Richmond warehouse and sales-rooms are located on Ninth street opposite the Capitol Square, and the store was established about four years ago, since which time it has rendered most valuable service to Richmond in enhancing her reputation as a piano and orhancing her reputation as a piano and or-gan market, to which Mr. Minor contri-buted so much during his long experience and indefatigable labors as a travelling most valuable service to Richmond in enhancing her reputation as a piano and organ market, to which Mr. Minor contributed so much during his long experience and indefatigable labors as a travelling piano-salesman.

AN EXPERT.

Mr. Minor entered the concern and established the Richmond house with a thorough knowledge of the different makes of instruments, to which was added a musical culture that enabled him to discriminate as to the tone and other qualities of an organ or piano. He is an expert. Further, he has the confidence of all with whom he has been thrown in contact and enjoys a wide reputation for good judgment. The Richmond house, therefore, started business with an enviable prestige, and that prestige has been more than sustained to the advantage of the firm and of the general business of the city.

The long, The long, A. Acre, and Professor George D. Meares, all of whom have had valuable experience in the business. Outside of the city the house is represented by travelling salesmen and branch offices in various portions of house is represented by travelling salesmen and branch offices in various portions of Virginia and North Carolina. CLASS OF INSTRUMENTS.

The firm will not allow their names to be associated with anything but first-class instruments—instruments that have been thoroughly tested—and what they recommend can be safely relied upon. To trust their judgment and representations in buying is to secure a sweet-toned, durable, beautiful instrument, as numberless persons can testify, and as is shown by the premiums they have secured upon the makes they handle. These makes are: of planos, the Weber, the Wheelock, the Chickering, and the Stuyvesant; and of organs, the Wilcox & White, the Mason & Risch Vocalion, the Needham, and the Self-Playing Pnuematic Symphony. The firm cannot be excelled in low prices for first-class instruments nor in the promptness with which they fill orders. Mr. Minor's standing as a nusician and perfect acquaintance with planos and organs renders it safe to order from the house by mail or telegraph, and even were he not engaged in the trade no better man could be found with whom to consult. Families and educational institutions contemplating purchasing an instrument will find it advantageous to correspond with the house.

Such houses deserve and should receive extensive patronage. They stimulate the asthetic, they bring money into the city, and they popularize a city. They have an influence upon a community that inculcates a taste for refined pleasures and amusements. Whatever stimulates the musical perception of the public has a tendency to make the home circle attractive and improve the social conditions. Since such houses as Hume, Minor & Co, have been in operation they have been the means of introducing planos and organs into thousands of houses where the possession of these instruments was looked upon as a, hope never to be realized, however much timight have been cherished.
